EX-MAYOR HIBBARD DEAD

End Came at 4:30 P.M. Sunday at His Home.

Tuberculosis Progressed With Rapidity and Heart Failed.

Mayor Fitzgerald Says He Died of Broken Heart—Tributes.

George Arthur Hibbard, on duty as Boston's mayor, died yesterday evening at his home. The event was unexpected, although there had been signs that the end was near.

The mayor was a man of wide experience, having served in various capacities in the city. He had been a leader in the Democratic party for many years and had held a number of important positions.

Tributes from former colleagues and friends were paid to his memory, and the city was filled with expressions of regret over his passing.

Mr. Hibbard had not been well for some time, suffering from tuberculosis, which had progressed rapidly in recent weeks. Despite this, he had continued to work until the day before his death.

His heart failed suddenly, and he passed away peacefully in his sleep. The city was thrown into mourning, and a special edition of the newspaper was printed to announce the news.

Mayor Fitzgerald, who had known Mr. Hibbard for many years, said that he was a true public servant and that his death was a loss to the city.

A memorial service was held at the city hall, and the mayor was laid to rest in a mausoleum in the city cemetery.
REPRODUCED WITH PERMISSION OF THE COPYRIGHT OWNER. FURTHER REPRODUCTION PROHIBITED WITHOUT PERMISSION.